BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS

Books

Squarely on the Wrong Side of History: Massive Resistance and the Struggle for Southern Schools

This book will probe the widespread conception of the “wrong side of history” through focused attention to several case studies of Southern communities that closed their schools rather than integrate them in the wake of the 1954 Brown v. Board decision, and the subsequent rise of white private academies including those that self-identified as Christian schools. The book will explore the religious dimensions of massive resistance as a window onto the moral economy of historical memory. Status: Manuscript in progress.

Redeeming the Dial: Radio, Religion, and Popular Culture in America (Chapel Hill, NC: University of North Carolina Press, 2002).

Blending cultural, religious and media history, this book offers a close look at the world of religious radio broadcasting from 1920 to 1960. The book draws upon recordings, sermons, fan mail, and other sources to tell the stories of broadcasters and their listeners who, together, transformed American radio evangelism into a profitable and wide-ranging industry. I argue that evangelical religion in America was (and is) deeply entwined with modern mass media, and that the history of one is incomplete without the other. Both are essential to understanding American culture in the twentieth century. The book was named one of the “Dozen Best” books on the History of Media and Religion by American Journalism in Fall 2006, and also won the 2003 North East Popular Culture Association Book Prize.
